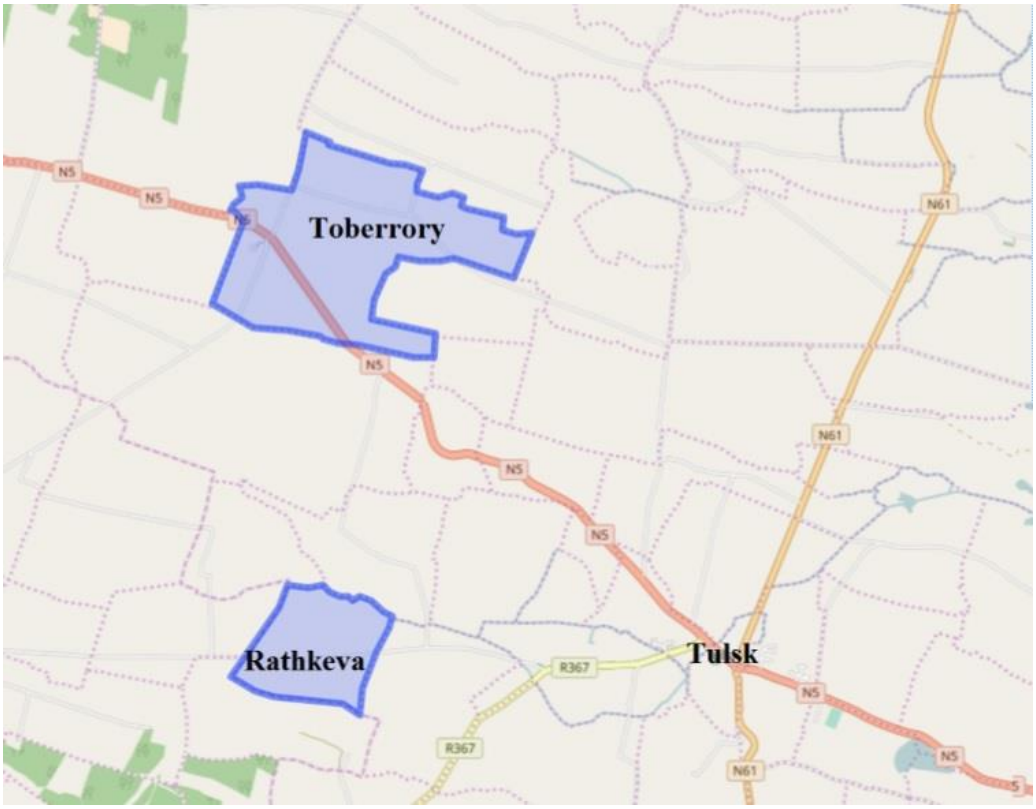
The Descendants of Martin Healy of Rathkeva and Toberrory, County Roscommon, Ireland



Rathkeva is a townland of almost 203 acres near the village of Tulsk in County Roscommon, Ireland.[1] A townland is the smallest geographic division of land in Ireland. In the past, one landowner often held a single townland with multiple tenants living on or farming the land. Martin Healy died in Rathkeva. However, his children were born in the townland of Toberrory. Toberrory contains about 574 acres and is less than 2 miles north of Rathkeva.[2] Sometimes the address of Rathcroghan was given in his family's records. Rathcroghan was not an official townland name but was probably the local name for an area in or around Toberrory. Toberrory contains the archeological site of Rathcroghan.[3] Now a national monument, Rathcroghan includes a Neolithic burial mound and ringfort.[4]
